

"ESSENCE OF EXPERIENCE"

W. F. Molloy, of Piqua, Writes Valuable and Inspiring Book.

WORK VERY HELPFUL

Tells How Ambitions May Reach Successful Achievement.

William Fillmore Molloy, advertising manager for the William T. Hart Company, has just completed the publication of a splendid book on "The Essence of Experience," of which he is the author, and which is a work of exceptional inspirational value. The book is dedicated to Mr. Molloy's mother, to whom he refers with ideal reverence as "The Teacher of My Youth, and the Anchor of My Manhood."

Mr. Molloy has written the book with no false standards and no theoretical knowledge, for he, himself, has gone through many of the experiences that plunge men into the depths of despair in the battle of life. "I know the sordid bread battle game backwards," he writes, "having had to figure food, rent and clothing for babies on ten dollars per week and less. This appeal to you is not asking you to do one thing I have not done myself."

Though Mr. Molloy's father was the owner of a vast estate in England, he never inherited any money and never had any help from any source excepting that created through his own initiative. "My family tree did not keep me from shoveling concrete at $1.75 a day, while supporting my family 600 miles away," he says. Mr. Molloy shoveled concrete days, and sold insurance at night. He was married at 18 years of age, and for years his life seemed almost a despairing struggle. But he used his spare moments for study and self-improvement. He never saw the inside of a high school. So his message to struggling men to improve their spare time is particularly consistent.

Mr. Molloy has had many difficult experiences that he has utilized in equipping himself for the bigger things in life. He knows what hard manual labor is. He knows what it is to want. He also has held high and responsible positions, among which may be named field sales manager for an eleven million dollar corporation, and he has filled the speaker's chair at the Detroit Board of Commerce without notice or time to prepare. Mr. Molloy dwells strongly on the principle of urging and inspiring young men to prepare themselves for any emergency in life, for at such time he believes great careers are often made.

"Some of the high points in Mr. Molloy's philosophy are these: "The making of a man is with himself, and none other. He has the God-given privilege of saying yes or no to his own ambition."

"A man is never down until he believes it himself."

"Enthusiasm is the mate of sincerity; the gauge of honesty; the legitimate emotion of good business; the savior of the hopeless; the starter of success; the bed-fellow of invention; the annihilator of cannot; the sire of can."

"Your maker intended that you laugh; He did not put the salt in your tears for a relish."

In a chapter on "Loyalty to Your Employer," Mr. Molloy says: "The moment you can not take orders and obey them, the moment you think the man who is hiring you doesn't know his business, the moment you let a personal resentment breed antagonism, quit. Smile and be loyal, or quit right now." In this Mr. Molloy is again characteristically consistent for with a fine spirit of loyalty, he holds his employer, Mr. William T. Hart, as his ideal of Christian manhood and business integrity.

Mr. Molloy devotes a chapter to the "Knocker," but does not exalt him to the importance of being an impediment in the path of progress, but shows how to utilize him as a stepping-stone in life's ambitions.

There are nearly seventy-five chapters in Mr. Molloy's book. But they are short, bright, interesting, entertaining chapters. Above all and of most importance, every chapter is a guide post of inspiration and helpfulness to the reader, whether he be a young man just starting out in life, or whether he be a person of mature years who has lost his grip on life and needs encouragement, and a new spur to his latent ambitions.

Mr. Molloy has given to the world a valuable book. The work and study performed in its preparation and production have been tremendous. The author is to be congratulated, but the reader who studies the volume with a sincere idea of being benefited is even more to be congratulated for he will find much to encourage and stimulate him in achieving any laudable ambition he may cherish.

ARRANGE SERVICES FOR MRS. GRIMES

Funeral to be Held Sunday Afternoon at First Christian Church.

The funeral of Mrs. Henrietta Grimes, wife of Ira Grimes, whose untimely death of pneumonia was announced yesterday, will be held Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. The services will be held in the First Christian church and will be conducted by her pastor, the Rev. Bailey.

Mrs. Grimes' age was 49 years, 8 months, 6 days. She is survived by her sorrowing husband and a young daughter who also has been seriously ill. Surviving also are a sister, Mrs. O. W. Richardson, of San Antonio, Texas, formerly of this city, and a brother, George Davis, of Cedar Run, Mich. Mrs. Grimes was a member of the First Christian church and was much interested in the work of its departments.

The interment will be in Forest Hill cemetery.
